Interesting Information for the Wearers and Users of Woollen Goods.

Wool’s Good Points

Results of Ultra-Violet Ray Tests.

Wool’s power to transmit the ultra-violet rays is higher than that of 120 different materials examined by the British Research Association for the Woollen and Worsted Industries. The results of the tests carried out by them are given in a treatise, “Ten Scientific Reasons why Wool should be Worn,” just published.

A typical case of two hosiery fabrics of exactly similar construction and knitting is quoted. The ultra-violet rays traversed a total thickness of just over one-quarter inch of wool and less than one-sixth inch of cellulose acetate. “Thus the wool fabric,” the investigators comment, “is one and a half times better than the artificial silk fabric.”

“In the case of blankets the all-wool blanket proved superior to the mixture of wool and cotton. A bleached white cricketer flannel transmitted the radiation through eight layers of a total thickness of one-quarter of an inch. It is thus possible to wear an appreciable thickness of wool garments; be warmly clad; have an elastic material that will not crease, etc., and at the same time receive as much ultra-violet radiation to the body as when clad in a lesser thickness of artificial silk or other material.”

A further test showed that it takes 1,920 hours to reduce the strength of chrome wool to one-half of its initial value, as against 940 hours for cotton, 900 hours for artificial silk, and 200 hours for silk.

The tensile strength of wool was demonstrated to be 17 tons per square inch; equal to that of a gold wire of the same diameter. Wool was found to be so light that one ounce (of 90’s) quality measured 100 miles in length.

A wool fibre 8 inches long and of diameter only two ten-thousandths of an inch was stretched wet until its length was increased by one third. The stretching force was removed and the fibre returned exactly to its original length in fifty hours.

Wool is also shown to retain for the longest time the heat in a warm body which it covers. Its moisture-absorbing power under ordinary atmospheric conditions is 16lbs. of water per 100lbs. of dry material, which is equalled only by viscose artificial silk.

The other figures are: Nitro artificial silk, 15.5 lbs.; linen, 12 lbs.; natural silk, 11 lbs.; cotton, 8.8 lbs.; and acetate artificial silk, 7.6 lbs.
